

I am appalled that a company like Sinclair Broadcasting, which uses public airwaves free of charge, has decided to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election.

Sinclair is obligated by law to serve the public interest. This example shows us the dangers of media consolidation and the danger to democracy that it poses. The job of these stations should be to see and hear from the people in our local communities and to hear debate and discussion about issues, not the garbage and one-sided bias that is being presented in "Stolen Honor".

The FCC should regulate this. Sinclair's actions show that we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. The license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard. Thank you.
